Literature review

The scope of CORPLAY project is to enhance the role of sport in preventing youth radicalization, by developing a sport grassroots innovative approach to tackle intolerance, xenophobia and discrimination leading to extremism, while increasing youth participation in sport

call for stories

We are interested in: comprehend what radicalization is and how it can happen at grassroots sport level understanding which capacities and competences should be upgraded at grassroots level for a better use of sport in facing societal challenges.

Radicalization has been defined as the social and psychological process of increasing commitment to extremist political or religious ideology. Radicalization is thought to occur during adolescence or shortly afterwards among young adults who are impressionable and seek to resolve personal negotiations of identity. Typically adolescence is a period of maturation in which young people experiment with their identity, group relationships, political ideologies and their place in the world.

If you are a coach, a teacher, a person who works with young people or in social contexts where these issues are frequently faced and you have a story to tell, send it to us!

You will see your story published in our website, you will contribute to the development of the CORPLAY educational resources and to the construction of a “counter-narration”, helping to set up the tools and guidelines useful to respond to learning needs.

The stories are in interview format, visit the website (www.corplay.eu) to download the form.
Send your material at: info@corplay.eu

CORPLAY web platform is now online

Through the web platform we are sharing main information about the project; the literature review and the stories that we are collecting on (de)radicalization and sport. We created the structure of the contents to disseminate outcomes and knowledge and to provide learning tools to coaches, teachers, sport manager who face problems due to behaviour related to radicalization.
